

2.2 The Lion, the Man and the Statue

Long ago, men and animals could talk to each other. Once a man and a lion got talking. The lion was very proud of his strength. "I am the king of beasts. I am stronger than any man. That is why men fear me."

The man was also proud of his intelligence. "Don't forget that men are more intelligent than you are. That is why they can hunt you or capture you."

They both began to argue about who was greater. At last, the man took the lion to a statue in a big garden. It showed the great hero Hercules standing proudly with a dead lion at his feet.

"See, this statue proves that men are greater," claimed the man.

"Not at all!" the lion replied quickly. "This only shows that the statue was made by a man. If lions made statues, they would show the lion standing and the man lying dead under his paws."

From this story, we can see that the story depends on the storyteller. When someone else tells the same story they tell it from their point of view.

POINTERS

- 1. Listen carefully to find the answers from the story.
 - (1) Who speaks first in the story?
- (4) What did the man show to the lion?
- (2) What was the lion proud of?
- (5) Who speaks last in the story?
- (3) What was the man proud of?

The teacher reads out the story slowly once or twice.

- 2. Read the story aloud along with the teacher.
- 3. Tell the story in short in your mother tongue.
- 4. Tell the moral of the story in your mother tongue.
- 5. Find two words beginning with 'pr'- from the story and guess the meaning of each.

- 6. We learn two things indirectly from the story. Find and write the sentences which tell us that
